

Language Staking

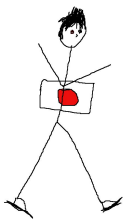

Plot:

The 2018 Winter Olympics in Pyeongchang, South Korea. The best male ice skaters in the world have gathered to compete for olympic gold.

Among this year's top contenders is German McGermanFace, a three-time olympic silver winner, who is competing once again against Japan McJapanFace, who beat him for gold in the last Winter Olympics. Whilst he may not have any olympic golds and is the oldest on the rink, McGermanFace has won more gold medals in the worlds than the others combined, due to his 5 year gold streak in his early 20's, still leaving him amongst the top skaters in the world. However, with this being his 4th Olympics and him rapidly approaching his 30's, this would seem to be his last chance at that olympic gold he's never quite achieved.

Skating persona: Entertains the audience, makes them fall in love with him.

Japan McJapanFace, who is currently considered one of the top skaters in the senior division, is the reigning Olympic gold champion and is looking to be the first male skater in decades to win consecutive gold. Currently in his prime years in the sport, he's seeking to immortalize his name in the history of skating before he reaches the end of his peak as a top figure skater and is entering the competition with high expectations.

Plot twist: Japan kills your character if you win as a character not as Japan.

Personality: Basically a smug bastard who's not super in your face about his accomplishments but won't fail to remind you that he's better at skating than you. Super carefree, friendly, cheerful, and confident about his abilities and acts like he doesn't have a single worry in the world and likes to poke fun of his fellow skaters. Has a super professional skating persona, magically transforms into a calm and beautiful skater on the ice with extremely elegant and soothing performances and treats his fans and the press in a way that makes him look humble, composed and considerate which makes him a douche to other skaters because they sometimes look bad if they don't like Japan even though he treats them completely differently from how he treats the general public.

China McChinaFace, who won his first worlds this year at just 16, is looking to repeat his stellar performance last year and take the a medal again this year. There was a scary moment about a month back when an ankle injury threatened to keep him from the Olympic games, but he has persevered and shows no hesitation in his warmups here tonight.

Personality: A small ball of fluff that is doing his best to act serious and grumpy to get taken seriously but rarely ever is because people can generally see through him. Really loves having fun in reality and gets anxious about the expectations on him and thinks no one sees him as a real adult competitor. Probably kinda scared of Germany and maybe idolized Japan before entering the senior division and now doesn't know if he should be glad that Japan's treating him as his competitor or if he should be pissed that Japan's always making fun of him. Overall just really wants to do his best and prove himself to the world and his peers but also scared of failing and making a fool out of himself. He's a lot more confident on the ice and tends to have fun, charming skating persona because he forgets about his worries and just really loves skating??

Spain McSpainFace is the clear underdog of the skating community, who shot to fame by winning last year's worlds surprising everyone and becoming the first Spanish ice skater to do so. Will he also bring Spain their first Olympic Gold medal in men's skating, or will he crumble under the astounding pressure that only the Olympic games can bring? Either way, he is the fan favorite this year.

Set up:

The best ice skaters in the world have gathered in PyeongChang for the winter olympics. The first part of the story is either the night before the finale or shortly before. Some of the ice skaters are hanging out and getting to know each other, different interactions lead to the character you are playing as to start teaching the ice skaters around him (or teaching the character you play as if we want to do that) some basic words in his language

Next a screen with a recap of the words you learnt in the round is shown and you can quickly review.

Round 1- the short program

First part of the minigame, as the skater you have to use your arrow keys to follow a path highlighted on the ice, can lose points if you mess up too badly. As you skate you reach different points at which you have to perform a specific trick, at each point you are asked a multiple choice question about the words you just learnt. You have 30 seconds to answer? If you get it right you get points. In the first round there should only really be 5 questions.

Rankings after the first round shown

The next part of the storyline should be between the short program and free skate, either at night when the skaters are interacting again or during warm up/while someone else is skating (hopefully different location and situation than in the first part). Some of the skaters wish to learn more of the language after having learnt the basic words and attempt to use the ones they just learnt (kinda recap from earlier). Basic phrases are taught, cool.

Recap screen again

And so the free skate begins. Before you are reminded of your ranking. Same deal as the short program, just 10 questions instead, and some may be about words from the first round.

After the free skate the rankings are shown again, depending on how many points you got you may end up on the podium. In that case an image is shown of you standing there, yay, and some may congratulate you. If not you see the podium with the other skaters on it and are comforted and reminded that there is always next time (except if you are the German, cause he old)